BIO

BANIC is a singer/songwriter from Tampa, FL. He sings originals and select covers. He performs using his first love guitar and some say his true voice the ukulele. His music has been described as "Unique with a classic feel". That is what he wants his audience to do is feel. If it is love, sadness, pride, laughter, or pain, as long as it creates a feeling.

He started out after high school running a local open mic night in Palm Harbor. It became known as the "Best Open Mic Night in Tampa Bay". After that he had a few failed bands and was about to give up on music. Then he met a band Burden Fly, a local band. He did not perform but was a roadie, security, sound guy, and driver for them. They were the ones that gave him the name BANIC. Which came from being called Big Ass Nick and evolved to BANIC (Big Ass Nick In Charge).

After the band broke up he took a break from music and got married and had two girls. One day his first child asked him to play his guitar. Do to this he wrote his song "My Favorite Song". This made him look back at old songs and noticed something. When he put these songs in a certain order they told a story. This became his first release Blue Butterfly EP. He released it on February 15th 2011 on his website. To promote the release of his debut release he went to the radio. BANIC played the songs from the album and told the stories and performed the title track on Center Stage w/ RJ on WMNF 88.5 FM. Two years later he came back to the show to bring in the New Year on January 1, 2013. This time he spoke about and performed some of his new songs. He has taken time since then to work out those songs and write new ones.

He is currently working on his follow up, a ukulele based EP called "Four Strings and the Truth". This will be released globally on digital distribution with Symphonic Distribution. He is currently looking to book shows to promote the EP.
